

With regard to the upcoming Boardcast Ownership vote on easing restrictions, I would like to comment that the current level of restriction (35%) appears adequate to me. I am opposed to increasing the combined reach percentage above 35%.

I get news from many sources but my primary source is and will remain the newspaper. The FCC's argument that the internet has made current rules obsolete is proposterous. What are your statistics on how many people use the internet as their primary news source? I work in high tech and we don't even use the internet as our primary news source. Maybe some day, but not yet. So, until you have statistics showing that this country's citizens regularly access different venues to get their news, do not change the rules.

Thank you
